Then, at the church's urging, Miss Croft asked her friends to join her in a "Welcoming and Affirming" houseparty. Almost 250 people showed up—more than 30 had traveled from out of town—and a succession of local house bands performed, including the Oklahoma City-based group Old Crow Medicine Show, which in 2014 won the Grammy Award for best Americana album for its album Aim High. But this wasn't a casual gathering. People in long-sleeve shirts with the sayings "Love wins" and "Jesus: King of the Universe" and "I disagree with what you said, but I'll defend to the death your right to say it" had an open-minded approach to others. They held a meditation and a "light dinner," and speakers included members of the Oklahoma City Human Rights Commission and the Southern Poverty Law Center. The party's message was simple: The Bible says love wins; love is Christlike; what the church teaches, Miss Croft said, is what the world needs. And with a sprinkle of Bible references, the venue was set. Miss Croft doesn't want to be known as b7e8fdf5c8
