Changes in the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone system were assessed in an experimental model of renal hypertension using the renal hypertensive rabbit. The blood pressure-volume relationship of the left ventricle was used as a measure of cardiac hypertrophy and atrophy. Parabiosis and uninephrectomy were carried out in 40

New Zealand White rabbits and subcutaneous implants of radioactive lithium chloride were used for an in vivo measurement of glomerular filtration rate. The first 3 months of this study consisted of controls with intact kidneys, controls with uninephrectomy and controls with bilateral subtotal nephrectomy. Animals with intact kidneys and with uninephrectomy exhibited equivalent blood pressures.

Animals with bilateral subtotal nephrectomy exhibited elevated blood pressures which persisted, with a slight reduction after 3 months, for the duration of the study. Animals with uninephrectomy also exhibited a significant increase in blood pressure and decreased glomerular filtration rate. The animals in the control group (intact kidneys) exhibited no significant changes in blood pressure or glomerular filtration rate. After uninephrectomy, proteinuria developed and renal cortical ACE activity was significantly increased. There was no correlation between glomerular filtration rate and either blood pressure or cardiac hypertrophy (left ventricular weight). The results of this study support the hypothesis of glomerular injury in the experimental renal hypertensive rabbit model. It is suggested that the decreased glomerular filtration rate is due to increased intraglomerular pressure, particularly in view of an increased glomerular number and increased cortical ACE activity.

President Trump's remarks at the White House press briefing Wednesday about taking an ax to federal regulations were met with mostly favorable reviews from the media, but there were reports of how some of the White House staff in attendance reacted when the president offered the highly unusual advice. Trump described the federal regulatory code as "a total disaster." "It's a complete disaster. It's a total disaster," he said, according to a White House pool report.

FSviewer• A former contestant on Donald Trump's reality television show The Apprentice told BuzzFeed on Thursday that he had sexual relations with the future President after filming ended. Javani Girod, who was a waiter in high school, was a contestant on the now defunct NBC show from 2005 to 2006. In a second tome, also titled The Boss, Girod reveals that he and then-candidate

Trump began a relationship after the show ended. Girod says he had sex with Trump multiple times, including in a hotel room and at the Playboy Mansion.

Girod, who says he has mental health issues, met Trump at the NBC Studio in Times Square in 2005. Girod said Trump was "relaxed" and "seemed to enjoy himself" in an interview with BuzzFeed's Charlie Warzel. "I just figured he was enjoying himself, and we were going to have dinner. I was going to go pick up a pizza for my girlfriend," Girod told BuzzFeed. The contestant said that after a few drinks during the warm-up, he noticed Trump's eyes were red. Girod told Warzel that Trump apologized to him. "He looked like he had been crying," Girod said. Girod said that he invited Trump to the Playboy Mansion, where they spent the night together in a hotel suite. "We had sex about a dozen times. We would go to his hotel room and have sex," he told BuzzFeed. Girod said they also had an open relationship, and that he was never forced to have sex with Trump. "I don't want to make this sound like I had a perfect life," he told BuzzFeed. "But it wasn't like I was raped." Other former contestants on The Apprentice told BuzzFeed that Trump got physical with them, once while he was in his underwear, and three times while he was dressed. In the second edition of The Boss, the tabloid publishes the exchange of text messages between Trump and former Playboy model Shera Bechard. The exchange started with a one-night stand in 2006 with Bechard, who was 22
